

Academic information about basic things in life

At the university we learn a lot about chemistry, biology and philosophy but not much about how to make lifestyle choices, what values to pursue or how to make a successful couple relationship. Is it possible to work with those questions in a systematic or “academic” way? The information design research at the University of Oslo may lead to a positive answer to this question.